Shop Now Originally Published: November 19, 2019 One of the biggest advantages you have as an internet entrepreneur as of today is that you don't have to figure it all out for yourself. As for how to market your products - there are plenty of examples of profitable online companies to follow. Going hand in hand with this - there are already platforms that you can leverage to make your business startup fast and easy - there is no need to create your own website, online store, or e-commerce website. And, in fact, these third-party services could be your company's long-term basis. Probably the most powerful today is Amazon. Over the years this one-time bookseller has become huge. It's a dominant online retailer, selling everything from toilet paper to tennis shoes to high-end electronics. He is a player in the streaming film and TV show industry - even producing his own shows. It sells hardware such as the Kindle Fire tablet. It even has bricks-and-mortar retail stores now. And, not to mention, he took over the whole foods grocery store chain. That all points to a strong and innovative company. And while this is certainly positive, that's not why you, as an internet solo entrepreneur, should be interested in Amazon. One of the Little known parts (at least by the mainstream) of Amazon's business is that it allows people to sell products on their site, which means you can leverage the enormous scope and influence of that brand name. They have been offering this opportunity for sale of third parties since 2000. If you go along this route, route, in good company. More than 50 percent of amazon sales are made through third-party vendors. Even if you already have your own website and e-commerce store you may want to consider expanding your distribution on Amazon. You'll be able to reach more leads and increase customer sales for the first time that may be within reach of purchases on a lesser-known website. Once you buy your product on Amazon and get to like your product and rely on your brand you can move them to buy through your own online store. It's a lucrative opportunity - third-party sales account for billions in sales each year. You could take a slice of this cake and make your own five or six-figure income as an Amazon seller. And it's also easy. Using Amazon's Seller Central dashboard, you'll be able to manage an online business without your own website and let Amazon handle all the grunting work. (It's certainly ok to have a website, or a blog, or active social media presence - you just need to send potential shoppers to your Amazon page.) The big advantages of being an Amazon seller: You can take advantage of traffic coming to Amazon.com, which is about 215 million people a month in the United States alone. Not everyone will be in the market for your product, of course. But for those who visit the site and then look for products in their niche... you're in first place. As mentioned above, this can be a great way to reach new and customers for the first time. You don't have to worry about setting up an online shopping website. You just fit your products into the Amazon system and are visible to anyone visiting the site. You can really follow an online dropout business model so you just need to focus on promoting and marketing and letting Amazon's systems handle orders, delivery, etc. Amazon is a trusted brand. One of the biggest obstacles facing any new internet entrepreneur is getting prospects to trust them enough to actually buy something. When you operate under the Amazon umbrella, there is already a built-in level of trust. Being in a place where people shop regularly is a great thing! So you have made the decision to sell your products through Amazon. You start by going to this link to sign up as an Amazon marketer. You have to fit into one of almost 70 categories in order to be a third-party seller. Some of the most common categories -which are also profitable- are clothing, health, beauty products, baby products, jewellery, household and garden items, mobile phones, electronics... almost anything I would like to sell is covered. To a complete list go here: Yes, you have to pay a commission for the privilege of on Amazon. If you sell more than 40 products a month, that's probably your goal, you'll pay $39.99 a month), as well as other fees for things like the Amazon staff that manages your products. If you sell less, you will pay 99 cents per sale as well as other fees. Of course, if you compare these fees with the traditional model of having a brick-and-mortar business with rent, public services, employees, etc. there really is no comparison to how cheap this really is. In many cases, this is cheaper than renting a table in a second-hand market. The no way to sell on this site is to become an Amazon FBA seller. This means that all your orders are Fulfilled by Amazon. In other words, Amazon handles shipping, delivery and, if necessary, returns and returns or changes. You don't have to maintain or manage inventory either. Simply send your items (which you bought wholesale) to one of amazon's many warehouses across the country. Then every time someone orders - they get the order and send it for you. As mentioned above, it's almost as close to a business based on sending hands-free online as you can get. It's a no-as-problem business model that allows you to focus on marketing and increase your income to take home. That doesn't mean it's all smooth sailing. In order to make good money as an Amazon seller, there are a few things to consider. First, you can't simply list your products on Amazon and then wait for enough people to stumble upon them. Unlike a traditional brick-and-mortar business, the old adage of building it and coming doesn't necessarily hold true. You should be marketing your business on social networks, on your blog, using forum marketing, sending emails to your list... You should take the floor about your business and your products. For example, you could write a blog post with product reviews in your niche - with links back to your Amazon Seller page. And with every marketing effort - link back to your Amazon store. Creating an email list and then marketing to this list is also very effective. When you run a business on Amazon, you have to sell products that people are really interested in. To do this, it is important to keep in touch with trends through social media, what is in the news and other sources. There are some facts that you might be able to make a quick profit from - take fidget spinners, for example. But for long-term financial success, you'll want to focus on products in markets that are always strong, such as weight loss, natural health, self development, yoga, consumer electronics, for babies, and others. A good way to evaluate a profitable market is to check amazon itself - what are the bestsellers? Remember that it is a good idea to stay in a large main market that will continue to have demand for years to come. It's always worth seeing what others are doing in their niche. See how they value their products. What kind of marketing do they use. What specific, specific products, new products, which are being offered. Even if your Amazon store is doing amazing... It's no guarantee that it will stay that way. You can't snill. Always be evolving with the market to stay profitable. A great way to do research, especially on Amazon, is to read positive and negative reviews from customers. Find out what people hate and what people love about certain products then make sure they meet those needs and avoid the traps. You can start with just one product on Amazon. But if you really want to earn some money, you'll need to expand to sell a wide range of items. Again, you have to look closely at the market to see what is selling well... and then jump on the bandwagon. It is also important to take advantage of the holiday season. Christmas time is when bricks-and-mortar retailers make most of their money each year. Same for online marketers. Cyber Monday, right? Make sure it is well stocked to handle a flood of orders. And get this, there's a way to pay you twice. By joining the Amazon Partner program, you can include affiliate links to your own products in your marketing. So when someone buys they don't just make the profit from this sale... but also the referral commission! Selling on Amazon is a great way for new online entrepreneurs to get started in this market. It takes the election from selling online. Let someone else do the hard work of sending and managing inventory for you. And put a trusted brand to work on your behalf. Put it all together and you have a recipe for five or six income figures each year. Year.
